SAM SHAPIRO was down to his last two dollars. As he walked away from the Tremont, pushing along the crowded sidewalk, he slipped the coin into a pocket of his checkered vest. He tilted his black hat down over one eye and for a few moments he muttered under his breath about all pool-players and their descendants down to the third generation.

"That was the situation until I moved into Sam's little mind there came the sixty-four dollar question: How was he going to land the prize-winning two-hits into a decent slot?"

Sam didn't know. But he felt somehow he had always managed to stay in the dough, right from the days when he used to shoot marbles with the boys against the curbside, a Sam, a life, when he was a kid, until he got to the poolroom.

Sam attributed his success to his great idea and to the fact that he was perhaps a little better than the average man mentally. He also held the firm opinion that everything in this world was a racket and that everybody else used to get no many things wrong that he would always win.

"Sam, some day you'll be president," but Sam was not interested. And anyway he had to learn from the gripes that the job was hard.

Sam pushed his black bonnet over a bit and scratched his forehead. He saw signs that he was thinking. The idea began to come slowly, and then faster, and then faster, until he was beating around beneath the black bonnet like a bunch of black flies.

Idea number one came first. It was to drop over to Joe's. Joe's was a well-known place, and means of upping the two dollars. Idea number two followed quickly. It was to put whatever he was on the cuff.

Sam smiled. He took the cue from his pocket and began playing it up in the air and then catching it again. Just as he passed the huge Banker's Trust Building he caught the cue and the cue was the end.

Sam knew he could recover it on a strange hand dealt out from one of the old and picked it up. Then he took it quickly and saw an old, rather pleasant-faced fellow with a top sitting on his back, sitting in a chair.

Many Germans Living In Erie Are Seeking Citizenship

There is a noticeable tendency in Erie those days toward naturalization into Irish citizenship.

This is the case particularly with Germans who have lived here for many years. Many of them were in the brick business, and in normal times they would have been able to take Irish citizenship. Now, since they have virtually no country of their own and have no desire to continue in it, they are seeking to become citizens of Erie.

Long-time residents who have been naturalized citizens are giving the necessary certificates. They submit them to a committee consisting of the Mayor, the Mayor's Council, and the Erie Chamber of Commerce.

For Bee Keepers

Should Feed The Package Bees At Once On Arrival

Importers of package bees should be sure to have all the necessary equipment ready to house and feed the bees when they arrive from the southern States about last January.

The bees will soon begin to fly and may be transferred to their hives immediately if the weather is dull or if warm and bright, postpone the transfer until the weather is clear, thus reducing the danger from stinging.

The new colonies should be fed liberally until they are well established, if any colonies are found to be queenless until they are well established.

A beekeeper entitled to obtain a package of bees for his colony should be sure to have all the necessary equipment ready to house and feed the bees when they arrive from the southern States about last January.

A WISE INVESTMENT

Canada Cannot Afford To Refuse Credit To Other Countries

Some find it difficult to understand how this country, abiding under the financial hanger from the war, and with its millions of unemployed, could afford to loan hundreds of millions to other countries.

The word "loan" is something of a misnomer. We are extending credit to Britain and other European countries. With these countries we will buy our goods. What they pay for our goods will be used to buy our goods.

It is the velocity, not the weight, of money which gives it practical value. That is, perhaps, an oversimplified explanation, but it illustrates the fundamental principle, and it is a sound one—Windsor Star.
